Several More Sold in Hand

PARIS (Reuters). — France yesterday organized her first atomic bank from the top of a 100-foot cliff above the limit of the Sahara, joining the U.S., Britain and Russia in the "Atomic Club."

A community health official at County's Health Office was told the plutonium bomb was exploded successfully at 8 a.m. C.M.T. — half an hour after collecting calls late here on all airwaves crying over a vast area around the test site of Nag-

Israel Backs News Freedom at U.N.

UNITED NATIONS (Reuters). — Israel is among the few nations to have come out fully in favor of a U.N. declaration on the freedom of information, according to a report published on Thursday.

Communist countries which replied to a request by the Secretary-General for comment said they preferred a declaration on the freedom of information, rather than a declaration on the freedom of the press.

Israel declared: "The Government of Israel regards the adoption of a U.N. declaration on the freedom of information as a desirable step."

Britain gave the proposed declaration "full support," and the U.S. said it was a "natural outgrowth" of the universal declaration of human rights. Altogether, 29 governments replied.

Order to Prevent Nenner Going Abroad

TEL AVIV. — A court order restraining the ex-Mayor of Tel Aviv, Mr. Nenner, from leaving the country was issued Thursday at the request of the holder of a 12,000 promissory note signed by him.

Mr. Zvi Krulik, an insurance agent, claimed that Mr. Nenner had signed the note with a special notice that the signature was authentic. Other signatures to the notes are the present Mayor, Mr. Yosef Levi, and Mr. Meir Beit-Esh.

Mr. Krulik claimed that Mr. Nenner's signature was authentic. His wife and daughter left for Amsterdam that day.

Another restraining order, issued three weeks ago by the Jerusalem District Court at the request of Mr. Liskovski, has not been contested.

Mr. Liskovski is in possession of a note for 12,000 signed by Mr. Nenner and the then Secretary of the Tel Aviv Municipality, Mr. Zvi Ben-Zur.

The note was subsequently charged with embezzling some 12,000 of Municipal funds and is currently free on bail.

M. Kesary Elected Lydda Vice-Mayor

LYDDA. — Dr. M. Kesary, Abba Hava's son, was elected Vice-Mayor of Lydda on Thursday night. With the adherence to the two Abba Hava's coalition, the Lydda Municipality is now represented in its executive committee by two Kesarys.

The same meeting also elected an 12,000,000 development budget.

Meyer Levin May Sue Author Of Petra Film for Plagiarism

By PAUL ROSEN, Jerusalem Post Reporter

Mr. Meyer Levin, the author and film writer, is considering whether to take legal steps against Mr. Raphael Nussbaum, who he claims plagiarized his work to make the film, "The Burning Sands."

Mr. Levin has also called on the Israeli Government to take energetic steps to prevent the showing of "The Burning Sands" as it is a work of plagiarism.

It shows Jews among themselves to cross the Jordan border in order to steal and could not be better propaganda for "Nasser."

Mr. Levin said in an interview, "The Burning Sands" shot in the Negev and in Jordan is a work of plagiarism. Its script was written by Nussbaum, who has stolen my work."

Mr. Nussbaum has announced that the film will be shown in the Cannes Film Festival, and in the Foreign Ministry refused to recognize it as an Israeli film, we shall be forced, to our regret, to request the German distributors to register the film under their name."

Betsy, Chimpanzee Finger-Painter, Dead

BALTIMORE (Reuters). — Betsy, a nine-year-old chimpanzee known throughout the world for her finger-painting, died here on Thursday.

Spunky, another chimpanzee, fell on Betsy while playing in their cage, breaking Betsy's leg, she died later while suffering from shock.

Betsy rose to fame in March, 1957, when — after her first public sale — Salvador Dali spoke critically of her work. "I would expect much better from a chimpanzee," the surrealist artist declared.

The start of her rise to fame was marked by Moscow Radio. It ironically suggested that the U.S. should organize jazz bands with dogs as soloists, centipede ballet companies or choirs of jackasses.

Unperturbed by her critics, Betsy went on dabbling her fingers, toes and elbows over paint-covered canvases to fulfill the ideal of every young artist. She was commissioned to produce a work called "Winter in Winnipeg." It was unveiled in April, 1957.

LAW REPORT

The Jerusalem Post
February 14, 1960

In the Supreme Court Sitting as Court of Civil Appeals

Before Justices Silberg, Sussman and Ben-Zur.
Moshé Ben-Zur, Appellant v. The Administrator of the Estate of the late Salomon Brenner, Respondent (C.A. 252/59).

Co-Owner May Demand Recovery of Joint Property in Exclusive Possession of Other Co-Owner.

The Supreme Court allowed an appeal against a judgment of the Tel Aviv District Court delivered on October 29, 1959 (C.C. 254/59).

The appellant, Moshé Brenner, moved into two rooms of a flat belonging to the estate of his late father without the consent of the other heirs. The administrator of the estate, fearing that Brenner would be protected by the Tenants Protection Law of 1958 if the flat were sold as a partitioned property, asked the District Court for an eviction order against him. The District Court held that in accordance with the Mejelle and co-owner is not entitled to evict another co-owner from property held jointly by them. The District Court did not enter into this question at all as they held that the appellant and his estate are entitled to possession of the property belonging to the estate whatever the law with regard to joint ownership may be and ordered Mr. Brenner to vacate the premises.

Section 3(a) of the Tenants Protection Law, 1958, provides that: "Where a person occupies any property while being the owner or one of the owners thereof, and his ownership has ceased owing to the sale of the property... or owing to the partition of the property in a partition proceeding or a land settlement, the occupier shall become a tenant of the new owner of the property." (Authorized translation.)

In the appeal to the Supreme Court Mr. Wilner appeared for the appellant and Mr. Brenner for the respondent.

Justice Sussman, who delivered the judgment of the Supreme Court, considered firstly the question of whether an owner of jointly-held property may evict a co-owner. After considering Mandatory judgments on the subject, he held that the rule is that one co-owner is not entitled to exclusive possession of the whole or part of the joint property, all the co-owners being entitled to joint possession thereof. In other words, he held, there is nothing to prevent a co-owner from seeking recovery of possession of any part of joint property being exclusively occupied by another co-owner without his consent, it being immaterial whether the joint ownership arose as a result of inheritance or by any other means, since the Mejelle provides that joint owners are in any case strangers to one another as regards their shares in the joint property (article 1075).

Turning next to the question of whether the appellant, if not evicted from the premises in question, would be protected by the law in the event that they were sold, Justice Sussman said:

Model Plane Builder Wins Trip to Holland

Jerusalem Post Staff

TEL AVIV. — Fifteen-year-old Danny Berkovits of Kibbutz Givat Shimon, near Haifa, will go to Holland in April on the inaugural flight of K.L.M.'s Electra service on the Lyda-Amsterdam route.

Danny's model of a DC-4 jet was one of the best of those submitted in a contest sponsored by the K.L.M. representative in Israel on the occasion of the 40th anniversary of the Dutch airline. Another prize was won by a model of a DC-4 jet built by a 14-year-old boy from Givat Shimon, David Yonson, who took third prize in a flight to Gullies in an Airfix plane.

Second prize went to 11-year-old Amir Kibbutz, Givat Shimon. He will be the guest of K.L.M. on an Airfix trip to Elst. Forty other prizes were awarded by the jury.

The Goodman Auditorium of E.O.A. House was packed with children and their parents who came to hear the verdict of the jury at 1:30 p.m. on Friday.

Seated in the last row of the auditorium was the Director-General of the Ministry of Finance, Mr. Y. Arnon, who was among the participants.

High School Pupils Protest Non-Inclusion of Class Work

Jerusalem Post Staff

The crisis in the secondary school teachers' dispute seemed to be moving to a head on Friday evening. It was learned that the Ministry of Education announced that it would not accept the teachers' demands for a 10% increase in their salaries.

The teachers' union, the Association of Secondary School Teachers, announced that it would go on strike on Monday morning. The union leaders said that the Ministry's offer was a "bait and switch" and that the teachers would not accept it.

The Ministry of Education, in turn, said that it was not prepared to make any further concessions. It said that the teachers' demands were unrealistic and that the government was not in a position to meet them.

Ashkenazi Rabbis In Non-Party Union

Jerusalem Post Staff

TEL AVIV. — The formation of an independent and non-party organization of Ashkenazi rabbis and Sephardim was formally announced here on Friday, following a meeting of nearly 200 rabbis and laymen from various parts of the country.

The new organization, the "Union of Ashkenazi Rabbis and Sephardim," was formed to represent the interests of the Jewish community in Israel. It will be a non-party organization, free from the influence of any political party.

The union's first task will be to establish a dialogue with the government and to work for the improvement of the Jewish community's status in Israel. It will also be responsible for the religious and cultural needs of the community.

14 Sheel, 2720-28 Sheel, 1970

THE uneasy quiet which has prevailed on the Israel-Syrian border during the past two weeks was shattered on Friday afternoon by the attack on an Israel patrol. The frontier patrol was moving along the drained bed of Lake Hula within Israel territory, when this unprovoked and senseless assault caused the death of two Israelis and the wounding of a third. As in the last two attacks, the Syrians this time, too, prevented the removal of the wounded, whose lives might have been saved if they had received first aid immediately. Attempts by United Nations Observers to stop the Syrian shooting were of no avail. One cannot escape the conclusion that this form of attack is part of a deliberate pattern. Just as on December 24 and on January 30 when the wounded could not be evacuated, this time, again, the men were dead by the time help was allowed to reach them.

At Beit Katzir, the Syrians have been unsuccessful for the past week in their attempts to provoke Israel fire. Perhaps that is why they moved their operation further north. Perhaps they believed the topography of the Hula region was more advantageous for them.

The armistice between Israel and Syria was agreed on as an "indispensable step" toward the liquidation of armed conflict and the restoration of peace, and the Demilitarized Zone was created "with a view to separating the armed forces of the two parties in such a manner as to minimize the possibilities of friction and incident." But recent events have shown, if any proof were necessary, that the Syrians do not respect the armistice, and the purpose of the Demilitarized Zone has thus been nullified. The Syrians hold the heights and the slopes to the east of the Hula valley. They can attack at will, disregarding both the status and the purpose of the Demilitarized Zone.

In evaluating the situation along our northern border, this attitude of the Syrian authorities cannot be ignored. At the top of their hill it is enough to crouch behind a boulder — let alone to man a fortified position — to escape injury or avoid surveillance.

The Israel Government would do well to consider whether, under the circumstances, there is any point in maintaining the fiction of a Demilitarized Zone which affords no protection in fact or in law.

'Unwise' Announcement of Port Said Surrender

DURING these days (the first week of November, 1956) private life seemed to exist. It was useless to fix engagements and unwise to invite guests to meals. Luncheon could be at any hour and dinner was often not eaten until far into the night. My wife somehow adapted our domestic arrangements to meet these untidy requirements; my digestion took less kindly to them.

As a result of having no country home, except the cottage at Broad Chalk, we had moved our own pictures, furniture and books in Downing Street. I was never more happy at this arrangement than during these heavily charged days and nights. It was a refreshment to escape for a while from the official atmosphere and be able to reflect in an atmosphere which was part of my own personal life.

Relaxing with Pictures

I do not have many pictures, for I have never been rich enough to buy much. A watercolour by Dugoye de Segonzac, 'Le Canotier', which is a sketch for a painting now hanging in one of the national collections in Paris, was the first picture I ever bought. My collection was made for the most part when on holiday in France. I also hung upstairs in Downing Street a number of my father's watercolours, which I like more and more with the passage of years. My admiration of them is not merely filial. On several occasions during the prolonged crisis I found time to sit in my wife's green drawing-room and enjoy the two Derain sanguines, and the Degas bronze of a girl in her bath which Sir Alexander Korda had given us as a wedding present.

ON the noisy Sunday of November 14, we held two meetings of the committee of Ministers which had kept in constant touch with the situation throughout these anxious months. In the evening a full Cabinet considered the position. Our armistice from Malta was nearing Port Said. The Minister of Defence, who had just paid a flying visit to Allied headquarters in Cyprus, reported that Egyptian forces appeared to be withdrawing upon Cairo. The outlook for our action at Port Said was favourable and the Allied commanders believed that they could occupy key positions in the town by immediate parachute drop. This air assault was due to be launched at first light next day. There were good hopes of success without recourse to naval bombardment.

When the Cabinet met, the next stage in military operations lay still some twelve hours in the future. We had to consider two further resolutions which had been adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations. One had been put forward by Canada and the other by a group of Afro-Asian States prompted by India.

Creation of U.N. Force

The Canadian resolution asked the Secretary-General to work out a plan within forty-eight hours for the creation of a United Nations force which would secure and supervise the ending of hostilities in the area of the Canal. This was welcome to us. Reports reaching us from the United Nations, however, indicated that the purpose and composition of the force might not conform to our ideas. Sir Pearson Dixon was instructed to speak in favour of the Canadian resolution, while making our reservations clear and abstaining on the vote if they were not met.

The Afro-Asian resolution called upon the Secretary-General to arrange a cease-fire within the next 12 hours. A reply had to be sent to Mr. Hammarskjöld before midnight. The Government had a choice of three courses. We could proceed with our action at Port Said, repeating our offer to hand over to the United Nations as soon as an effective force reached the canal. Alternatively, we could postpone the parachute landings for twenty-four hours. This would give Egypt and Israel an opportunity to accept a United Nations force and allow time for the General Assembly to consider whether the Anglo-French forces might be accepted as its advance guard. Thirdly, we could defer all further military action on the grounds that we had in fact put an end to the Israeli-Egyptian conflict.

Objections to Postponement

It was clear to me that a postponement could not be accepted. I was confident that the Commander-in-Chief, if consulted, would urge overwhelming arguments against it, which he properly and promptly did. The political objections were also obvious, once action was halted it could hardly be resumed. Postponement would, in fact, have meant calling off the operation. If we postponed now we should be doing so before we had gained our main physical objective, to insert an impartial force between Egypt and Israel along the Canal. There was no United Nations force yet in being to fulfil our aims for us. Unless we persisted, it might never come into existence. The Cabinet was in favour of going forward and shouldering the political risks. It was determined by the news that reached us towards the end of our meeting. Though Israel had accepted a cease-fire in principle, she had not yet agreed to the United Nations force, wishing, no doubt, for information as to its location, duties and composition. All was still uncertain, there was every reason for proceeding with our action.

Telegram to Eisenhower

I gave an account of my opinion in a telegram to the President, in which I wrote:

If we draw back now chaos will be avoided. Everything will go up in flames in the Middle East. You will realize, with all your experience, that we cannot have a military vacuum while a United Nations force is being constituted and is being transported to the spot. That is why we feel we must go on to hold the position until the United Nations.

Anglo-French Jumps

At Port Said

At 8 a.m. on the 16th, some six hundred British paratroops had been in the air for some time. They landed on the west bank of the Canal entrance. At the same time five hundred French paratroops dropped to the south of Port Said near the waterworks, which they seized, together with an important bridge over the interior basin. Gamal airfield was quickly secured and the British parachute battalion advanced eastwards into the town itself. Continuous support was given by air from the carrier force. At 1.45 p.m. a reinforcing drop of a hundred men with vehicles and heavy equipment was made at Gamal airfield. A further four hundred and sixty French paratroops were dropped on the southern outskirts of Port

Said, on the east bank of the Canal, which they proceeded to occupy. Resistance was offered by the Egyptian commander offered to discuss surrender terms on behalf of the Governor of Port Said. At 3.30 a cease-fire was ordered, while negotiations went forward. About an hour later I gave this news to the House, which was then noisily cross-examining the Foreign Secretary. I am not sure that I was wise to do so. The effect in the House was instantaneous, the Government's supporters rising to their feet to cheer and wave their order papers and the Opposition being temporarily subdued. By this announcement I told the world of the cease-fire, thus alerting those who would not welcome it and giving them an opportunity of working against it.

Russian Net in the Ring

At seven o'clock in the evening a further signal arrived stating that the Egyptians had agreed to our terms. Their forces in Port Said had begun to lay down their arms, and their policy was cooperating with us in the town. I was immensely relieved. It seemed that our operations had succeeded instantly and at remarkably small cost. An hour and a half later came a very different message. The Governor of Port Said reported that he could not now agree to the terms and that fighting must resume.

Who had caused this decision? It is hard to believe that the Governor would have negotiated a cease-fire and then have proceeded to actual surrender without the knowledge of his Government. Nasser must have known during those five hours what was going on in Port Said. I am convinced that this reversal of action was prompted from further aid. We may never be able to prove it, but what is certain and significant is that the Soviet Union had taken their decision. The Soviet Consul became suddenly active in Port Said, stimulating resistance and promising help. The Russian had now won in the ring.

Yet Mr. Kaletsky had a surprise in store. Amazing though it may be, the 24 Freiduses were entirely different. Most of the negative elements mentioned above vanished in this second part of the programme, making for a very agreeable rendition. The musical side being neglected.

MUSICAL DIARY

Full Justice

The Israel Philharmonic Orchestra, Sixth Special Subscription Concert, Joan Martinson, conductor, Poles, Saltzman, Piano (Tel Aviv, Mann Auditorium, January 11). Rosalind, Voyage to Russia. Overture, Khatshurians: Concerto for Piano and Orchestra; Berlin: Fantastic Symphony.

KHATSHURIAN'S well known piano concerto became a new interesting item under Miss Saltzman's fingertips. This work consists mainly of two elements: one that is percussive, toccata-like, and a lyrical one. Miss Saltzman did full justice to both, presenting them in all their contrasting moods yet retaining the full unity of the work.

She started with robustness and strength, executing the difficult chord technique most exactly. There was not the slightest blurring of tones and passages, each phrase and chord being heard most clearly and distinctly.

The second part was an achievement in itself, starting the theme with great expression, she brought it to a magnificent climax.

Miss Saltzman also showed great understanding for the abundant oriental colouring, again fully expressing the composer's intentions. Yet her success would not have been so great without Mr. Martinson, who treated the score not as merely the orchestral part of a concerto, but as a symphonic work. The other works of the concert have been reviewed in these columns.

Erratic Chopin

Piano Recital by Jacob Kaletsky (Goodman Auditorium, Tel Aviv, February 21). All-Chopin programme. Barcarole, op. 60. Nocturne in A minor, op. 9, No. 2. In A minor, op. 17, No. 4. In F sharp minor, op. 28, No. 2. Etude in F minor, op. 25, No. 2. In C minor, op. 25, No. 11. Nocturne in F major, op. 15, No. 1. In F sharp major, op. 15, No. 11. Scherzo in C sharp minor, op. 20, No. 3. Freiduse.

MR. KALETSKY'S recital started under a bad star. The opening item made a most unclear and confused impression, as did the Mazurka. There was no constant line, the interpretation becoming mosaic-like. The musical expression, too, was pale and unimpressive. Yet beginning with the Barcarole, positive qualities came into clear evidence. The more dramatic elements in Chopin's music, as demonstrated in the Ballade and the Scherzo, seemed to suit Mr. Kaletsky's inclinations more than the lyric ones. Besides, he demonstrated a very impressive technique. His fortissimo of great vigour and force. His octaves are wonderful. This great force comes directly from the shoulder and the arm, hand and fingers being only a secondary source of energy. But in the first part we did not hear of this really impressive Chopin. Mr. Kaletsky's virtuosity and instrumental approach totally dominated his renditions, the musical side being neglected.

EXTRA CHARGE

Sir, — The reply of the Post Office (in your issue of yesterday), that a charge of an extra ILA for a car radio is made because it is not in the same house as the first radio is inconsistent with its charge of ILA for a (second) portable radio, which is obviously not used in the house at the same time.

This is either muddled law-making or, as "M.R." writes, discrimination against car owners.

Yours etc.
